Thanks for Sharing Your Thoughts

Our thanks to all students who participated in our recent online discussion forum Thoughtexchange. We asked about your experiences with learning at home - how it's working for you; what questions you have; the challenges have you experienced and your ideas for improvements. We had a huge response.

We know that many students are finding it challenging to manage learning at home with other priorities. Adjusting to the workload, establishing a routine for learning and managing deadlines can be difficult. Teachers are working on key concepts to ensure that students have the foundation for future learning. Every week, we gain experience, learn from each other and can refine our practice.

What's Next?

We are currently reviewing the feedback in detail and will be looking at the concerns of specific groups. This will help us in the following ways:

- Inform decision-making about next steps for supporting students and families;
- Working with educators to bring clarity and consistency to our practices;
- Doing some research to better understand some of the issues you have raised;
- Updating our FAQs to ensure you have the answers you are looking for; and
- Sharing the key themes and trends as we work with our education partners so that we all benefit from this collective insight.
